It s time we get off Microsoft s back. Why are we penalizing a corporation for being competitive? Because they re successful? That certainly appears to be the case. The original argument - Explorer vs Netscape - was decided by customers like me. My ISP provided Netscape with its package. I got rid of netscape because it did not satisfy my needs. Case closed. My decision. No coercion from Microsoft. That s why Microsoft has been successful: people like their product. When the whiners produce a better product people will buy it.
